Translation Notes

Kodankai, page 23

Most existing yakuza groups have a name ending in either -gumi (meaning “association” or “union”) or -kai (a similar term meaning “party” or “assembly”). What is amusing about this particular group is that the “Kodan” in Kodankai are the same kanji from the name of the publisher Kodansha.

LDK, page 115

The “LDK” classification is a Japanese system of interior designation for the purpose of real estate advertising. LDK stands for Living, Dining and Kitchen, the term for the general kitchen/common-room area, and is preceded by a number that signifies the other rooms (bedrooms or other purpose). In this case, a 3LDK means that the apartment has three rooms, plus a main kitchen-attached room.

Sukiyabashi Jiro, page 128

One of the most celebrated and lauded sushi restaurants in Japan and owner of a coveted three-star rating from Michelin. Its reputation internationally was boosted by the documentary film Jiro Dreams of Sushi, which explored owner Jiro Ono's dedication to his craft.

NEET, page 157

An acronym meaning “Not in Education/Employment/Training.” It refers to a person who is not a student or employed, and is not seeking work, either.

Akiba, page 157

A shortening of Akihabara, the tech-centered neighborhood of Tokyo that is the cultural center of the otaku subculture, based on its plentiful manga/anime-centric retailers, arcades, maid cafés, and so on.
